Does the Lifesraw work on salt water

Have you heard of the LifeStraw? It's a small water filter designed for one person that removes virtually all bacteria and parasites from unclean water. It has saved lives all over the world during natural disasters, helped areas with unclean drinking water, and even won awards for how effective it is. But of course we had one question for the LifeStraw: can it make pee drinkable? If it's truly such an amazing device, can it make drinkable water during the worst possible circumstances? We put it to the test, so read on to see if a LifeStraw will need to be part of your zombie apocalypse kit. Before we get started, here's what a LifeStraw looks like: ▼ Unfortunately it does not currently come in curly-straw form. The device is actually quite amazing. It can filter up to 1,000 liters (264 gallons) of water, enough for one person to last a year. Of course, we won't be drinking nearly that much, unless our brave Japanese taste-tester P.K. Sanjun really has to go. ▼ Here he is, prepped and ready with one cup of pee for testing. How was it...? ▼ Mmm...still tastes like pee! Unfortunately this taste-test ended up being a failure. While the LifeStraw may remove all parasites and bacteria, it does nothing about salt. It cannot be used to make ocean water or other salt water drinkable, and since urine typically has a high salt level, it's going to be like drinking from a salt shaker. Also the LifeStraw does nothing about taste either. It's still going to taste like pee no matter what. That may be an issue. Here's the video of P. K.'s taste-test, if you want to see human suffering in action: It seems like the search will have to go on for a portable device to turn pee into drinkable water. Until then we'll all just have to settle for drinking cans of princess urine, going to urine cafes, and playing urine video games. It's a wonderful, urine-filled world out there, and we've only just started to drink it all in. Source: LifeStraw, Wikipedia Images: ©RocketNews24 CC0/Sitterphoto/Pixabay Do you have spotty dishes when they come out of the dishwasher? Is timescale building up on your appliances and in your shower? If so, hard water could be the culprit, and a water softener could be the solution. When we refer to water as being "hard," it means it contains deposits of minerals including calcium and magnesium.How Does Water Softener Work?The process isn't complicated and involves a water softening system being installed into the piping of your home. Your existing pipes are used to pipe the hard water into the water softener. The resin bed in the soften contains tiny beads, which hold sodium, that attract the hard water minerals and remove them from the water. Then, the softener pumps the soft water out of the tank, and it flows back through your existing pipes.The majority of water softeners use plastic beads with a salt addition. After many cycles, the sodium in all the beads is replaced with calcium and magnesium. It's possible to fix this problem by using the regeneration cycle on the water softener. During this process, the beads are soaked in a strong solution of sodium chloride, which is referred to as brine. In doing so, the ions in the beads are removed, and they're recharged. Once the process is complete, the brine is flushed down a drainpipe.Which Water Softener is Best for My Home?There are many water softeners available on the market today. Be aware of companies touting that they're selling a saltless water softener that will produce optimal results. The truth is the water will still test as hard. When performing a water softener salt comparison, be sure to look at the degree of hardness, as well as the grains per gallon. When looking at specific brands, like GE water softener systems or a Nuvo water softener, take note of their price and manufacturer warranty. Is there GE water softener repair is something goes wrong? What features of the Culligan water softener are beneficial to your home? Answering these questions, as well as if they have a water softener manual, will help you arrive at a decision.Is the Installation Guaranteed?In addition to looking at the features and benefits of the water softener, it's essential you look at the companies who are performing the installation and service. For example, do the Rainsoft water softener prices include installation? Is it difficult to find Norton water softener parts if it breaks down? When you need service, will you be able to call Rainsoft water softener repair, or do you need to call a separate water softener repair contractor? Have you performed research for Rainsoft water softener reviews? These customer testimonials help provide additional information not only about the Rainsoft water softener but also whether or not they offer a commercial water softener or only residential services. MORE FROM QUESTIONSANSWERED.NET © 1996-2014, Amazon.com, Inc. or its affiliates Over thousands of years, the mountain top surrounding the volcano had eroded and tumbled down, forming a massive slope of unstable rock. Teetering on the brink of the loose scree ridge, clean water was the furthest thing from my mind. We had hiked two days to get to Black Tusk. Along the way we took the opportunity to drink water and fill our bottles from the streams we passed, and while the streams looked clean, we always filtered our water rather than risk getting sick. After all, you never know what's upstream of you. My water filter this trip was an award-winning device called LifeStraw, which was designed in Switzerland by Vestergaard Frandsen for humanitarian projects in the harsh conditions of Africa. It's an ingeniously simple water filter which anyone can use. Simply suck water through it and the filter removes 99.99999% of waterborne bacteria (>LOG 7 reduction), and 99.9% of waterborne protozoan parasites (>LOG 3 reduction) down to 0.2 microns in size. The EPA standard for removing the usual suspects, Giardia, E. Coli and Cryptosporidium, is 1.0 microns. At 0.2 microns, the LifeStraw provides five times more filtration than the EPA standard, which is considered "rigorous". The LifeStraw filters over 264 gallons (1,000 liters), which you know you've reached when water can no longer be sucked through it. My hiking partners were using traditional pump-spray water filters, and while they were busily pumping away, I was already drinking the cold stream water with no effort at all. I tend to drink water every hour or so, so I kept the LifeStraw in my pocket as I hiked, and when thirsty I'd pull my water bottle out of my pack, insert the LifeStraw, and sip directly from the bottle, as the LifeStraw is thin enough to fit through the bottle opening. The LifeStraw is easy to carry as it is only 9 inches long by 1 inch in diameter, and weighs less than 2 ounces. Comparatively, the water filters my friends were using weighed around 1 pound. On a long hike every bit of weight savings counts, and as experienced hikers know, it's the small items that add up to make your pack heavy. Asked By: Abraham Martinez Date: created: Dec 05 2021Answered By: Aaron Martin Date: created: Dec 07 2021 developed by a london-based start-up, QuenchSea is a portable, low cost desalination device that turns saltwater into fresh water. to do so, the apparatus combines a hydraulic system, a triple pre-filtration process, and a small reverse osmosis membrane to desalinate seawater into freshwater using human power only. Asked By: Reginald Hughes Date: created: May 12 2021Does LifeStraw improve tasteAnswered By: Michael Lopez Date: created: May 12 2021 The LifeStraw Go water filter bottle is great for when you are away from a filtered water source so don't have to worry about water quality, on the go. The filter really does help water taste good and removes bad taste as long as you are willing to suck the water out of the straw. Asked By: Aaron Parker Date: created: Dec 25 2021Should I get a LifeStrawAnswered By: Owen Rivera Date: created: Dec 28 2021 It's lightweight, easy to use, and simple for a super low price. It filters out particulates and pathogens like bacteria and protozoa (Giardia and Cryptosporidium), but cannot filter out viruses. If a lightweight, simple on-the-carry filter for a good price is what you seek, the 1.75-ounce LifeStraw can't be beat.
